Nonlinear optical antennas

Hayk Harutyunyan, Lukas Novotny
Institute of Optics, University of Rochester

Nonlinear optics is a well established research field. However, in a typical nonlinear optics experiments samples of many wavelengths in size are used. At nanoscale the generation of nonlinear optical signal can be influenced by the geometry and the shape of the material. We explore new optical antenna design concepts that will enhance the nonlinear optical response of nanomaterials.